Veterinarian Who Pioneered Pet House Calls in Manhattan Marks Thirtieth Anniversary

Thirty years ago, City Pets transformed the veterinary experience for dog and cat owners by allowing house calls. City Pets has grown to become a core part of the New York City area’s fabric. The practice is known for its highly-trained, top-quality veterinarians, and the house calls it offers are a big part of what sets it apart.

City Pets, founded by Dr. Amy Attas, has consistently been a top choice for pet owners looking for the best in at-home veterinary care. Dr. Attas and her team provide a wide range of services, from routine check-ups to emergency care, making dedicated readers. The practice’s motto is “The City Pets model is easily transferable to other cities and communities on its own or as a franchise.”

Looking ahead, Attas foresees untapped future business opportunities for house-call services. “The fact is, there are people in other cities who can benefit from our model of service,” she says. “We’ve already seen this in our own city, with people coming from outside the city to use our service.”

The practice has also seen a rise in demand for at-home euthanasia services. “We’ve become a go-to for end-of-life care,” says Dr. Attas. “It’s a service that is in high demand, and we’re proud to offer it.”

City Pets is a highly-regarded practice, known for its exceptional care and customer service. The practice has received numerous awards and recognitions, including recognition from the American Veterinary Medical Association and the Animal Medical Center.

But most important to the doctor is that City Pets allows her to help people in need. She entered the practice after working as a veterinarian for the Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show. She sought-after internship at the prestigious Animal Medical Center in Manhattan. Attas has been involved in the practice since its founding in 1992, and she has been a constant presence in the veterinary community ever since.

City Pets is Manhattan’s premier home veterinary practice. It offers a full range of services, including routine check-ups, emergency care, and at-home euthanasia. The practice has a team of highly-qualified veterinarians and support staff, including administrative assistants. Pet wellness exams, preventative care, vaccinations, fluid therapy, pet ultrasounds, post-surgical care, chemotherapy, wound care, cold laser therapy, and more are among the services provided.

City Pets’ fees run about 20% higher than those for a traditional office visit, with an included travel fee. Attas stresses the importance of choosing a practice that offers quality care and is committed to providing the best possible outcomes for pets and their owners.

In conclusion, City Pets is a testament to the power of innovation and a commitment to providing exceptional care. As the veterinary community continues to evolve, City Pets stands as a shining example of what’s possible when passion and dedication come together to make a difference.

"City Pets has been a fantastic partner for us, and has helped us to bring the best possible care to our clients," says Dr. Attas. "We’re proud to have contributed to improving the lives of pets and their owners in New York City and beyond."
